Exiled Lawyers' Contribution Towards the Concept of 'Crimes against Humanity'

This lecture addresses the concept of 'Crimes against Humanity' from an intellectual history perspective, by scrutinizing legal debates of marginalized (and exiled) academic-judicial actors, especially from smaller Allied countries, within the United Nations War Crimes Commission. This lecture deploys the idea of 'legal flows', and highlights the constitutive role of the global experience of exile, in mediating the formation of legal concepts during and in the immediate aftermath of the Second World War.
